There are currently five contracts for oil and gas drilling in Portugal, celebrated between 2007 and 2015. Three of these contracts are for deep offshore oil drilling, 46km from Aljezur, a surfing paradise in one of the last untouched beach areas in Europe. The remaining two contracts are for gas inland, close to Nazaré and Fátima, 3.200 metres deep. These contracts are for conventional gas drilling, but we know that the only way of commercially extracting gas in this area is with fracking.

CRUCIAL INFORMATION:

- There has been no environmental impact assessment for any contract;
- Long list of negative impacts: oil spills, loss of maritime ecosystems, earthquakes contamination of water and land for agriculture, destruction of local agriculture, tourism and nature economies;
- Local population or local governments have not been consulted;
- Contracts were celebrated in a midst of mystery and corruption;
- No economic benefits for the country: 3-8 % royalties, and no jobs created;
- No fuel purchase priority.
